

Eileen Flanagan has been leading workshops on spirituality and social justice for nearly twenty-five years. As a leader of Earth Quaker Action Team, she helped craft and implement the strategy that pushed a $4-billion-a-year bank to withdraw from financing mountaintop removal coal mining. She is also the author of three books, most recently Renewable: One Woman's Search for Simplicity, Faithfulness, and Hope, which tells the story of the midlife spiritual crisis that led her to climate justice activism. It recently won a Silver Nautilus Book Award and was a finalist in the Next Generation Indie Book Awards. For more information about Eileen, please visit her website, <http://eileenflanagan.com/> . For an article about how the EQAT campaign won its campaign, see http://www.huffingtonpost.com/eileen-flanagan/small-quaker-group-takes-aim-at-big-bank-and-wins_b_6777104.html?utm_hp_ref=climate-change. For more information about EQAT and its current campaign to push PECO to power local green jobs, visit <http://www.eqat.org/>.