

Justin Wright Justin Wright is an experienced ADR practitioner and consultant. He has expertise providing transactional assistance, behavioral change, facilitations and both mediation and negotiation training and coaching. In addition to his work with Habitus and Active Neutrals, he serves on the training team at Harvard Law School's Program on Negotiation and at Northeastern University Business School. His teaching experience includes a college seminar course on Negotiation at Yale University and six weeks terms in Shanghai for legal professionals. He has extensive practice in mediation including business, interpersonal, contract, housing and harassment prevention order matters referred by the Massachusetts Trial Court. Justin brings this wealth of hands-on experience and application to his negotiation training and coaching practice.

Justin has designed and led trainings for corporate, educational and non-profit institutions in the US and abroad. More specifically, he has trained individuals at companies such as, Eastman Chemical, Bank of America, Anika Therapeutics Inc, Commonwealth Financial, NeighborWorks, Bavaria, FINCA, Funcación SIGNUM - Colegio de Notarios, IBM Europe, IFC Cantabria, Better Future Project and Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

Wright is also the co author of the forth coming book End the Job Hunt, which focuses on the use of negotiation, collaboration and influence instead of typical networking and job searching to attain a meaningful career.

Because of his focus on ethics and resource economics while at Yale University, Justin is particularly interested in improving the productiveness of conversation or negotiation between activist groups and decision makers around resource management. Most recently, he has been working to facilitate conversations within various communities about how to respond to climate change and with student activists at a wide range of colleges and universities.

Before entering the field of conflict management, Justin co-founded NextGEN, an international NGO that works to inspire and support youth to take action toward creating a sustainable world. In 2010, he worked with the Transition Town Movement in Media, Pennsylvania to assess the town's ecological footprint and create a vision of a sustainable future. Justin graduated from Yale with a BA in Ethics, Politics and Economics.