The Right Time to Change: Growing Our Hearts to Meet the Moment

On Campus: Apr 7, 9, 11, 2025

A course to investigate our deeply held beliefs and to develop the skills we need to change our own minds through exercises, conversations, and embodied practices, with Dwight Dunston.

In this workshop, Quaker artist and facilitator Dwight Dunston will lead participants through exercises, conversation, and embodied practices to get in touch with our deeply held beliefs while developing the skill to change our own mind.

The spiritual technology of continuing revelation has been essential to Quaker faith from the very beginning, requiring a fundamental openness to change. Yet actually allowing our hearts, minds, and spirits to be open to new truths is easier said than done. While the culture we live in promotes “sticking to our guns” when it comes to politics, justice issues, and even interpersonal dynamics and conflict, our faith calls us to be in community in order to ground into deeper discernment.
